

A Collaborative Project of Vancouver Island Literacy Network

Designed and printed by printshop@sd71.bc.ca

Sites to See
at Savary

I see one giant rock,
perfectly perched.

I see designs in the smooth, silky sand.

I see sea
foam bubbles.

I see shimmering
sand and sea.

I see footprints
along the way.

I see red sky at night,
sailor's delight.

I see something in the sand.

I see a huge
sea star,
hiding in the
kelp.

I see another
big sea star.

I see two dried sea
stars, side by side.

I see ripply ridges in
the sand.

I see shellfish catching
a ride on a tire.

I see
seaweed
wrapped around a rock.

I see two lonely
red beach chairs.

I see holes drilled
in driftwood.

I see a flock of seagulls. How many seagulls can you count?

Victoria Clarke has kindly gifted these photos to our Vancouver Island book project. We are extremely grateful that she has shared her photographic talents with us.

Victoria Clarke has taken photographs since she was a young teenager, encouraged by her father's passion for photography and print making. Victoria's travels around the world to places such as Mongolia, Iceland and Bhutan, have provided rich subject matter for her photographs. Her photographic work is also informed by her painting through which she explores abstract expressionism with a range of mixed media. She lives in Victoria with her family, loves the outdoors and is a volunteer with a local search and rescue group.